JAPAN

- Japan-United States conduct joint military exercises; Japan decides not to relax the arms export ban; declassified reports highlight debates over nuclear future of Japan

In a very important development at the backdrop of the tensions on the Korean Peninsula the United States and Japan wrapped up seven days of joint military exercises. About 40,000 U.S. and Japanese military personnel took part in these exercises. This was called the largest joint field training exercise between the two nations. This was the 10th such exercise since 1986.<sup>13</sup> Meanwhile, this exercise was temporarily suspended when two Russian reconnaissance planes were spotted over the Sea of Japan. This was stated by the Defense Ministry sources. The Self-Defense Forces and U.S. forces were conducting an exercise which included simulating the interception of ballistic missiles off Noto Peninsula. It was reported that the Russian planes flew from north to south over the area where the missile-intercepting exercise was being conducted, and they continued to fly over the Sea of Japan for a few hours after that.<sup>14</sup>

On the domestic front, the Democratic Party of Japan (DPJ) executives have decided that they will not rule out the possibility of penalizing the ruling party's powerbroker Ichiro Ozawa if he ignores a request to explain to parliament about a money scandal involving him.<sup>15</sup>

There are also reports which suggest that the government's decision not to relax the nation's de facto arms export ban in new defense guidelines will result in Japan being left out of joint projects involving defense equipment with nations other than the United States. There are two sides involving this development while some in the government have voiced concern the nation's defense industry will lag behind in technology, others have said the decision may negatively affect relations with the United States.<sup>16</sup>

In other developments, according to reports, Japanese declassified diplomatic documents have shown that the Foreign Ministry of Japan had long debates over the issue whether to give up the right to possess nuclear weapons. This was prior to Japan becoming a signatory of the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons (NPT) in 1970. The 15 documents released by the ministry which include the diplomatic policy guidelines in 1969, suggest that the ministry was wavering between leaving an option to arm Japan with nuclear weapons in the future and joining the NPT.<sup>17</sup>

According to the Wikileaks revelations, Singaporean diplomats have made comments on the leaders of some close Asian allies, including neighbouring Malaysia, calling them corrupt, incompetent or stupid. Meanwhile, Abu Tholut who is suspected of plotting attacks in Jakarta and assassination of political leader has been arrested by Indonesian authorities. Abu Tholat is suspected of helping to set up training camps for terrorists in Aceh province of Indonesia. In 2004, Tholut was imprisoned for seven years, but was later released on grounds of good behaviour.<sup>20</sup> However, the Indonesian police have charged Abu Bakar Ba'asyir with inciting terrorism in the country, a charge the cleric has been denying. He has served a 26 month jail term earlier on similar grounds.<sup>21</sup>

In other developments, according to the Deputy Rural and Regional Minister of Malaysia, the country is expected to achieve 100 percent literacy rate for adults by the year 2016. According to the reports, literacy rate in Malaysia is currently at 96 percent.<sup>22</sup> upon that normalization in the relationship can be achieved through mutual consultation and with full attention and consideration for each other. There is also need to intensify economic cooperation especially on bilateral trade and also to carry out joint projects in the future. Both the leaders also discussed such as European security issues and opportunities for Russia's cooperation with the EU and NATO as well as supervision of humanitarian cooperation, in particular stepping up youth exchanges, cooperation in economic, energy, and transport sectors. Both the leaders oversaw the signing of several agreements, including a declaration on cooperation in economic modernisation, intergovernmental agreements on sea transport and cooperation in protecting the Baltic Sea from pollution by oil and other harmful substances, and a protocol of intent on establishing centres for dialogue and harmony in Russia and Poland.<sup>25</sup> Agreements related to postal and electronic communications as well as on cooperation between the two countries' prosecutor generals' offices were also signed two countries.<sup>26</sup> Reports noted that Katyn massacre case also featured in the talks between the two sides. It would be worth noting that Soviet secret police NKVD had allegedly carried out Katyn massacre of more than 20,000 Polish nationals in April-May 1940.

However, President Medvedev reassured that this cooperation will continue and will help to clear up all of the difficulties in the two countries' relations.<sup>27</sup> In the Russian-Polish Public Forum, President Medvedev presented the Order of Friendship to the Polish filmmaker Andrzej Wajda, for his outstanding contribution to the development of cultural ties between Russia and Poland.<sup>28</sup>

In another significant development, the 26th EU-Russia Summit was held in Brussels on December 7. This summit follows from the previous summit held on May 31 – June 1, 2010 at Rostov-on-Don in Russia. President Dmitry Medvedev headed the Russian delegation, and the European Union was represented by President of the European Council Herman Van Rompuy, and President of the European Commission Jose Manuel Barroso.

During the Summit, official announcement was made on the completion of talks between EU and Russia on the latter joining the WTO. understanding was signed by Russian Economic Development Minister Elvira Nabiullina and EU Trade Commissioner Karel De Gucht. The memorandum of understanding removes one of the last major obstacles in Moscow's nearly two-decade long effort to join the world trade body. Earlier this year, Russia achieved the backing of the United States for its bid. After this, the EU had remained only major block which opposed to Russia's bid to become a member of WTO.

However, in other developments during the Russia-EU Summit, one of the key discussions was on easing the visa regime for short trips by Russian citizens to the European Union. In this regard, milestones were set for the subsequent integrated work in this area, which includes taking into account the draft agreement on abolishing visa requirements for Russian and EU citizens, which was handed to the EU at the summit in Rostov-on-Don.<sup>30</sup> President Medvedev utilised the occasion to relay the measures taken to improve the financial and economic climate and encourage investment. Discussions were held on a broad range of issues such as global economic situation and ways to overcome the effects of the global economic crisis, on the implementation of decisions made at the G20 summit to reform the global financial system, on Euro-Atlantic security including in the context of results of Russia-NATO Council meeting in Lisbon and decisions made at the OSCE summit in Astana.<sup>31</sup>

In other developments in the region, reports noted that Russia and Kazakhstan have come up with a joint plan of action for the next two years that will give a boost to the strategic relationship between the two countries based on 'friendship, good neighbourhood partnership and mutual benefit.' The agreement was signed in Moscow by Russian President Dmitry Medvedev and Kazakh President Mr. Nursultan Nazarbayev<sup>32</sup>. This was in fact the tenth meeting between the two heads of states in this year.
