- 8 CIA personnel killed in a suicide attack in Khost; Parliament rejects 70% of nominations for the new cabinet under Karzai ; Election Commission: Afghanistan parliamentary elections to be held on May 22, 2010; Afghanistan is deadlier than Iraq for US troops, says report; 25 security guards killed by Taliban in Musa Qala

The CIA base in the eastern province of Khost was hit by suicide bombing on December 30 as a result of which 8 CIA personnel were killed. Officials described the attack as a major blow to one of CIA's key center for intelligence related to its counterterrorism operations. The deadly incident is quite similar to the 1983 bombing of the U.S. Embassy in Beirut where 8 CIA officers were killed, reports noted.<sup>1</sup>

Meanwhile, on January 2 the Parliament rejected 70% of the nominations for the new cabinet as proposed by President Karzai. The complex process of voting rejected 17 of the 24 nominees. The nominations were announced in December 2009 and retained 12 current ministers in their posts for a second term.<sup>2</sup>

The Parliamentary elections would be held on May 22 this year as announced by the Election Commission on January 2. Chief electoral officer for the Independent Election Commission, Daoud Ali Najafi, addressed a press conference in this regard and noted, "The election of the Wolesi Jirga (Lower House of Parliament) will be conducted within the constitutional framework."<sup>3</sup>

In other developments, there were reports suggesting that in 2009 the number of US troops who died in Afghanistan is much more in comparison to Iraq. More than 300 U.S. troops died in Afghanistan in 2009 as against 148 in Iraq. According to Pentagon records, this is the first time since 2003 that more troops

JAPAN

- House of Councillors elections in 2010 would be crucial for Prime Minister Yukio Hatoyama ; Japan and the United States to develop the F-35 next- generation stealth fighter; Japan and Russia establish a vice-ministerial subcommittee on trade and investment

Prime Minister Yukio Hatoyama will face a crucial test in 2010 as the Democratic Party of Japan-led government heads toward the House of Councillors elections this summer. His leadership qualities have already been challenged and therefore the stakes are high for the 62-year-old prime minister and the DPJ as reports noted. Presently, the DPJ controls the Upper House with the help of its junior coalition partners. In case his party wins a majority in the Upper House, theoretically, it will be able to run the government without heeding what the coalition partners say, or even dispense with their support if needed.<sup>19</sup>

Amongst other developments, Japan and the United States are contemplating Tokyo's participation in a multinational project to develop the F-35 next- generation stealth fighter. The move is intended to clear the way for Japan to introduce the F-35 as its mainstay fighter jet in future as countries who are not participating in the joint development would not be allowed to acquire it in near future.<sup>20</sup>

Meanwhile, there were reports which suggest that Foreign Minister Katsuya Okada and Russian Industry and Trade Minister Victor Khristenko agreed to establish a vice-ministerial subcommittee on trade and investment to expand bilateral economic ties.<sup>21</sup>

IRAN

- 8 people killed in fresh violence; Pro-government rallies across country; Mousavi: My blood is no redder than theirs

Violent clashes across the nation claimed at least 8 lives and left several people injured. As a result, the security forces arrested more than a dozen dissidents including aides to reformist ex-president Mohammad Khatami, opposition leader Mir Hossein Mousavi, veteran leader Ebrahim Yazdi and the award-winning campaigner for human rights, Emadeddin Baghi. The arrests and the raids conducted by the security forces are likely to further antagonize the opposition which has defied the authorities ever since Ahmadinejad returned to power in the contentious June 2009 presidential elections. These demonstrations were held on the sacred day of Ashura when thousands of protesters poured on to streets of Tehran and other major cities to stage fresh anti-government rallies. According to the state television, at least 15 people were reported killed in Tehran alone. Majority amongst the dead were members of “anti-revolutionary terrorist” groups as noted by the television report. Meanwhile, Iran’s bloody crackdown on the protesters drew criticism from around the world including its key trading partner Russia and some western countries.<sup>22</sup>

In other developments, thousands of Iranians demonstrated in favour of their government in major cities across the country opposing the anti government protests. The supporters of the government marched in Tehran, Shiraz and Qom shouting “Death to opponents!” Notably, Tehran has accused Western powers of supporting these protests.<sup>23</sup>

Leader of opposition Mir Hossein Mousavi stated that he would even sacrifice his life in support of the ongoing campaign against the presidential polls held in June 2009. Speaking on the fresh incidents of violence Mousavi noted, “I am not unwilling to become a martyr like those who made that sacrifice after the election for their rightful national and religious demands.” “My blood is no redder than theirs,” he further added. Demanding the government to cease the crackdown against his supporters, he urged the government to “take responsibility for the problems it has created in the country... release political prisoners... and recognise people’s right to lawful assembly.” Mousavi also

The Provincial Governor in Anbar, Qassim Mohammed Abid was reportedly injured in the attack on the Governor House in Anbar. Some senior security officials were also killed and injured in the blasts. The Security Chief of the compound, Colonel Mahmud al-Fehdawi was killed and Deputy Police Chief of Anbar, Colonel Abbas Mohammed al-Dulaimi was injured in the incident, reports noted.
