always raised “Kashmir dispute” on every regional and international forum through parliamentary diplomacy.

The speaker said that the “oppression and brutality of the Indian government against the innocent Kashmiris” has put the peace of the world and the region at stake. They said that repealing of articles 370 and 35-A from the constitution of India has deprived the “Kashmiri people of their identity and freedom” which is a violation of the promises made to Kashmiris at the international level. The speakers vowed to extend moral and diplomatic support to the “oppressed Kashmiris” and spare no effort to highlight the Kashmir issue to the world.

Deputy Speaker Qasim Khan Suri said that October 27 “reminds us of the tragic event when the Indian army forcibly occupied Kashmir.”

While addressing the young people (Pakistani-American students from colleges in New York), ambassador Akram urged them to help create awareness among people in the United States (US) about the "Kashmir dispute and the gross human rights abuses by Indian troops in Indian occupied Jammu and Kashmir."

He further stressed that the US is a democratic country and its leaders are responsive to the pressures from their constituents. He noted that on the diplomatic front, Pakistan was doing all it can to "enable Kashmiri people to exercise their right to self-determination" through a United Nations (UN) supervised plebiscite under the Security Council resolutions.

He stressed that as a result of Pakistan's efforts, the Security Council has met thrice on Kashmir issue since 2019 when "India annexed occupied Kashmir." He also reiterated that due to the efforts of Pakistan diplomats in highlighting the "Kashmir cause", the UN Secretary-General, Antonio Guterres, made a strong statement upholding UN Security Council resolutions to resolve the dispute over Kashmir, and the UN High Commissioner for Human Rights issued two reports denouncing right's abuse in Kashmir and calling for an investigation.
